A&E Review
Duck Dynasty

Quack, Quack! The show about the men in beards. The show about the Southern Christians. We have all heard about this TV show at least once: “Duck Dynasty.”

“Duck Dynasty” captures the life of the Robertson family living in West Monroe, La. On the show, you see what goes into their business, Duck Commander; what they do for hobbies, hunting and fishing; and how they raise their teenage children with Christian values.

I think this TV show is a good influence for anyone. As a Christian, I believe these values are very important, especially for children and teenagers as they are growing up in this culture. As a Sunday school teacher at my church, I implement these values during our class, as well as promote this show for them to watch.

This TV show does reach so many people. “Duck Dynasty,” eight seasons in total and the season finale covered 19-year-old John Luke Robertson’s wedding. According to variety.com, the ratings had of ages 18-49 and 3.26 million viewers in total.

The values and ways of living this family expresses not only are for their children, but to America as well. According to liveactionnews.com, the family members starring on this show use their popularity to share their beliefs in videos and interviews. One Robertson man said he and his wife promote abstinence and they actually waited until marriage. Abstinence, a tough subject in our culture, however, I believe it's what's best for me.

Even 18-year-old Sadie Robertson is using her fame to promote the values she was taught from her family. She wrote a book titled, "Live Original" and went on a tour to different cities to speak about it.

I think this show is great overall. If you want to learn more about Christian beliefs, they got you covered. They don't preach at you through the television, but it's a perfect way to indulge in The Lord. If you want to see behind-the-scenes work for Duck Commander, you got it. If you want to see bearded men walking neck-deep through a muddy river just to find the perfect hunting spot, "Duck Dynasty" got you. .
